

3rd Annual Ethical Perspectives in Health Care Pain Management Beyond the Politics

Oct. 17, 2012 8:15 a.m.- 4:30 p.m.

Course Description

Striking a balance between appropriate pain management and prescription drug abuse is a major ethical dilemma in health care. Pain management attitudes often conflict with the fundamental principles of health care, its ethical foundations and law enforcement. The public, media, community standards and pain experts may influence treatment parameters, but who listens to the voice of the legitimate pain patient? Explore the ethical challenges with clinicians, ethic experts and law enforcement of pain management as a fundamental human right in the midst of a national "pill mill" crisis.

Keynote Speakers

Myra Christopher holds the Kathleen M. Foley Chair in Pain and Palliative Care at the Center for Practical Bioethics where she was CEO and President from 1985-2011. She helped draft the 1990 Self-Determination Act. Currently, Christopher is a member of the editorial board of the American Journal of Bioethics (AJOB), a consultant for the Duke Institute for Care at the End-of-Life and serves on advisory boards for the Federation of State Medical Boards

Robert Twillman, Ph.D., FAPM is Director of Policy and Advocacy for the American Academy of Pain Management. A clinical psychologist, he worked as a clinician in academic medical centers for 20 years prior to joining the Academy. Dr. Twillman has extensive experience in the treatment of both pain and depression, in the context of both cancer-related pain and chronic non-cancer pain.
