HEALTH LAW
CONFERENCE

Medical, Legal, and Ethical Aspects of Pain Management in Florida

Presented by MECOP and Jointly Provided by the Center for Innovative Collaboration in Medicine and Law and the Florida Bioethics Network

MONDAY, JANUARY 25, 2016

8:00 a.m. — 4:30 p.m.

FSU Alumni Center

- This program will identify, describe, and critically analyze the most significant legal and ethical issues that may arise as Florida physicians and other health care professionals endeavor to satisfactorily manage the challenges associated with patients who claim to be suffering from serious and persistent pain.
- We will examine governmental initiatives and the regulatory and litigation environment surrounding health care pain management practices in Florida and examine the impact of these public initiatives and legal environment factors on both inadequate pain treatment and excessive pain treatment.
- We will discuss ways that health care professionals can be guided to successfully balance sometimes competing ethical, legal, and clinical interests characterizing this dynamic patient care context.

Audience

This conference is designed for physicians, attorneys, nurses, pharmacists, social workers, psychologists, and others with an interest in continuing education in health policy, legal medicine, health care ethics, and public health in Florida. Members of the public are welcome to register and attend also.

Learning Objectives

- Understand major current governmental initiatives in Florida intended to control the clinical practices of physicians and other health care professionals in managing patient complaints about serious and persistent pain
- Appreciate the underlying historical underpinnings and policy rationales shaping the regulatory and litigation environment within which pain management practices take place in Florida
- Identify legal and ethical risk areas confronting physicians and other health care professionals in responding to patient complaints about serious and persistent pain
- Evaluate various strategies for health care professionals and attorneys to pursue in trying to avoid or mitigate the legal and ethical risks associated with responding to patient complaints about serious and persistent pain
- Understand and deal effectively with the particular clinical, legal, and ethical nuances of pain management in special population groups, such as pediatric patients, geriatric patients, and patients approaching the end of their lives
